In the world of sneakers, two of the most universally recognized logos are Nike's swoosh Jordan Brand's Jumpman. In the hip-hop world, particularly in relation to chicago's youthful rap scene, probably no logo is known as the Lyrical Lemonade cartoon that appeared at the beginning of music videos for Juice WRLD and Famous Dex, including In 2013, Lyrical Lemonade began as a blog covering the up-and-coming music scene in the Windy City, which included the likes of Chance the Rapper and Chief Keef. Since then, founder Cole Bennett has turned the blog into a media company that boasts a count of 12 million subscribers on YouTube and even a co-founded music festival (Summer Smash) that caters to Chicago's grass-court youth movement. Soon, Bennett and his business hobby will add Jordan Brand collaboration to their growing list of accolades with a colorful Aerospace 720. While it's no stranger to collaborating with creative types, a Jordan-backed Lyrical Lemonade sneaker may seem casual, but the partnership makes perfect sense as this year's All-Star Weekend is heading to the Midwest. Perhaps taking its cue from an upcoming Nike Air Max 97 and Air Flight 89, the futuristic silhouette opts for a fresh striped blue on the Chicago flag for its tomaie. At the heel, shots of purple, green and yellow take control of suede overlays and TPU moldings, also appearing on the lyrical lemonade cartoon that decorates the tongue of the right shoe. The shoes on the left feature the blue and yellow cardboard logo on the tongue, while their insoles change its color scheme to an alternate purple and yellow. At the bottom, plump air cushioning wears the main blue hue, but the translucent outsuts outs reveal more than Lyrical Lemonade's distinctive color palette just below the wavy pull. No official information about the release is yet known for this pair, but a drop in mid-February to coincide with Chicago's All-Star Weekend is a possibility. Until then, look at this Jordan Aerospace 720 below and keep it locked here for more updates.
